Windows PowerShell is a command-line shell for Windows. It is provided as an integrated part of the Microsoft Windows operating system and is designed as a scripting and administrative tool. Its design goals are: Microsoft has included a set of tools for managing system and network administrators to ensure that they are able to execute administrative functions from a command-line interface rather than a graphical user interface. The developer says that PowerShell was designed to make

Windows administration more productive by "simplifying and automating tasks that previously required multiple steps and that have become routine tasks". He also said that "PowerShell has the ability to connect to services, shares, and to the Internet. It can also automate repetitive tasks such as sending e-mails or downloading files from the Internet." Key features of Windows PowerShell: Supports IPv6, an advanced internet protocol for computers. Includes the full.NET Framework.

Supports the Microsoft Windows OS. Runs scripts and interact with applications written in the Visual Basic.NET programming language. Provides rich scripting and administration capabilities that can be used to automate tasks, troubleshoot problems, create custom solutions, and interact with the system. As we move toward a service-oriented architecture, we'll need to be able to dynamically link a cluster of machines into a network-agnostic cluster, handle the failover and system stability of all of them, and ensure that they can all act on behalf of the same customer at any time. We'll have to do this in a way that's flexible enough to scale the computing infrastructure as well as the capacity of the cluster itself. I will be giving a presentation on this at ApacheCon Europe 2008 titled "Scaling Out Apache HTTP Server with Apache Mesos". I will be demonstrating a hybrid system built using Mesos and Docker that can scale up to 64 virtual machines. I will be demonstrating the following:

Configuring Mesos Managing clusters across a cluster of 32 machines Tuning Mesos Adding custom services to the cluster
