The system provides better in-game decisions as ball handling, dodging and other moves are performed with more speed and control than ever before. New animations also enable players to perform more realistic and controlled acrobatic moves that they would not be able to execute if they were controlled using traditional methods. "We're entering a new era of in-game movement with this system," said Oliver Bierhoff, FIFA Executive Producer. "It's the biggest change that FIFA has ever seen in terms of our in-game technologies, and a big part of that is thanks to our new gameplay engine, our advanced animation systems and our new motion capture techniques. "It gives us an unprecedented level of control over the in-game action on the pitch. We can achieve almost any type of action using our cutting-edge motion capture technology, while still allowing players the freedom to move, change direction, use their skills and strategy to achieve their offensive and defensive objectives." The system offers players a far more authentic look and feel for their on-pitch manoeuvres. The system has been developed in conjunction with the likes of Chad Ochocinco (New England Revolution), Joe Cole (Tottenham Hotspur), Luis Suárez (Liverpool FC), Lionel Messi (Barcelona), Cristiano Ronaldo (Real Madrid), Neymar da Silva (FC Barcelona), Robert Lewandowski (Borussia Dortmund), Zlatan Ibrahimović (Paris Saint-Germain) and Mesut Özil (Arsenal) who are the first players to be involved in the extensive development process, as well as numerous other key football personalities, including those who are linked with the Varsity 8 project. The technology, which has been under development for two years, now offers players a new level of player freedom. The key mechanic is speed, based on human movement, with an emphasis on direction, angles, balance and other real-life movement to deliver a hugely realistic experience. Now players can perform a completely new type of movement that was previously impossible and feel closer to the athletes that they have seen on the pitch in real life. All of the 22 match players were filmed in an unprecedented number of camera angles, allowing for a complete motion capture of their movements. A match session was recorded to capture the movements of the players, making the whole process a true collaboration between humans and computers. As the technology

Guanine-Cytosine Rich DNA Derived Nanoparticles as a Potential Carrier for Encapsulation of siRNA. Cationic polymers have great potential for siRNA delivery due to their low cytotoxicity. However, due to the low thermal stability of the polymers, siRNA could be released before reaching the target site leading to the loss of therapeutic effectiveness. To overcome this problem, a thermosensitive cationic lipid, dimethylaminoethyl methacrylate (DMAEMA) was synthesized and then formulated with a low critical association temperature. The resulting nanoparticles were shown to form stable complexes with siRNA at physiological conditions. The delivery system was found to enhance the treatment against prostate cancer cells (PC-3) compared to free siRNA. This is the first example of using DMAEMA based nanoparticles as a carrier for the siRNA delivery.
