Field of the Invention The present invention relates to the use of super-coated cementitious material for sealing, patching, and reinforcing foundation structures, such as pipes and tanks. 2. Description of the Prior Art In general, the prior art for sealing foundation pits has been to inject a waterproofing fluid, such as mortar, tar, or the like, over the pipe and/or tank wall. This approach involves additional labor, and delays the pipe or tank installation; requires additional equipment, such as a suitable pump; and requires coating with mortar or other appropriate materials which becomes a potential harbor of developing problems. It is also known to coat steel reinforcement bars with waterproofing and corrosion resistant material. As used herein, the term "cementitious materials" refers to the continuous strands of cementitious materials, such as cement slurries, aggregate, air-entrained concrete, or the like. It is also known to use a tubular containment layer of single strand or multi-strand woven and/or non-woven polyester or nylon material (hereinafter called polyester yarn) and cementitious material for continuous reinforcement. However, it is also known to use uncoated hollow nylon or polyester strands, or metal strands for continuous reinforcement. It is also known to cover the reinforced cementitious material with a geotextile fabric to provide additional tensile strength for the polyester yarn and cementitious matrix. However, the prior art reinforced cementitious material has the disadvantage of having a limited tensile strength and/or poor bonding to the polyester yarns. It is also known to use metal strands as continuous reinforcement to provide a liquid-tight and water-tight encapsulation. However, the prior art reinforced cementitious material has the disadvantage of having limited tensile strength. It is 6d1f23a050
